How tightening your home can save you money

Expect record average price of 12.5 cents per kilowatt-hour

By Jonathan Fahey
The Associated Press

That precious, cooled air that leaks out of your home every summer is money leaking out of your checkbook.

Electricity prices are expected to rise faster this year than they have since 2009, to a record average of 12.5 cents per kilowatt-hour, according to the Energy Department. And prices are highest in the summer, just when you need more power to run the air conditioner.

But many residents are paying far more than they should to cool their homes because cold air is leaking out and hot, humid air is getting in. The air seeps through obvious places, like under doors, and not so obvious places, like cracks around plumbing that you can't see.

"We accept a much higher level of bad performance in our homes than we would in our cars. You shouldn't be uncomfortable," says Jennifer Amann, director of the buildings program at the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy. "Homes don't have to perform badly."

To see if your home is a bad performer, try a thorough home energy audit. They are offered through utilities and local contractors and are often subsidized by state energy efficiency programs.

The audits can cost $100 to $400, but they can lower both summer cooling bills and winter heating bills by finding leaks and other

Mutual fund fees are falling, investors smiling

Funds had an average expense ratio of 0.74% last year

By Stan Choe
The Associated Press

Good news for investors: We're keeping more of what's ours.

Mutual funds charged less to cover operational expenses last year, as a percentage of their total assets. It was the fourth straight year that the average expense ratio fell for stock mutual funds, according to separate reports from the Investment Company Institute and Morningstar. And it's not just stocks that have become cheaper for investors to own. Expense ratios have also dropped for bond and money-market mutual funds in recent years.

It's a win for investors because they get to keep more of their returns, and funds with low expenses have historically performed better than higher-cost rivals, says Russel Kinnel, director of manager research at Morningstar.

That's because low-cost funds essentially have a head start in the race for returns: High-cost funds need to make more just to match the performance of their competitors once expenses are taken into account.

It may seem like no fun to parse expense-ratio data when the difference from one fund to the next may be less than a quarter of a percentage point. "But it's something, and that advantage compounds over time and adds up to something meaningful," Kinnel says. Low costs are such a good predictor of success that Kinnel suggests investors look at a fund's expense ratio first when considering whether to purchase it.

Stock mutual funds had an average expense ratio of 0.74 percent last year, according to the Investment Company Institute. That means for every $10,000 in assets, a stock fund took $74 to cover expenses. That's down from $77 in 2012 and $100 a decade earlier. The expense ratio covers everything from analysts' salaries to the cost of mailing shareholder reports.

The expense ratio does not include every

Waiting game: Why small businesses won't hire

BOA found that 52% plan to hire over the next 12 months

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
The Associated Press

Even as the economy extends its growth and small businesses slowly add jobs, most owners are still holding off on hiring.

Small businesses have not been hiring at the pace that's needed for a robust economic recovery, and many owners have no plans to add to their payrolls, according to recent surveys. In three released last week, the most optimistic reading came from Bank of America Corp., which found that 52 percent of owners plan to hire over the next 12 months. But Wells Fargo & Co. found only 21 percent planned to hire, and in a Citibank survey, 25 percent had plans – numbers consistent with other surveys in the past year.

Some owners who do want to hire face obstacles like finding workers who can and want to do the job. In monthly reports from the National Federation of Independent Business, owners have said they can't find people with the skills they need.

What will it take for companies to hire? The answer differs from one business to another.

WANTED: FOUR CLIENTS: Marilyn Trent estimates it would take four more clients bringing in revenue of about $250,000 for her to hire for her company that designs websites and company logos. Trent Creative is based in Detroit, where the local economy has been hurt by the devastation the auto industry suffered during the recession.

Competition is a problem. Even with the

Texas Traffic Congestion

By M. Ray Perryman
The Economist

One of the most frustrating aspects of many Texans' days is commuting to and from work. Rush hour has expanded far past 60 minutes, and travel times are becoming increasingly unpredictable. The problem of overcrowding goes beyond safety and inconvenience, it's also extracting a toll on the economy. Moreover, with continued growth in the population and business activity, congestion is getting worse every day.

The Texas A&M Transportation Institute (TTI) estimates that traffic congestion on Texas roadways costs more than $10 billion per year (and rising) in total delay and fuel expenses. Texans spent an extra 472 million (yes, 472,000,000) hours in travel time. Imagine all of the things that could have been accomplished or enjoyed in those wasted hours. Commutes are a reality for most members of the workforce, but losing 472 million additional hours just because of crowded roadways is clearly a bad situation.

Another problem is that travel times are more unpredictable than they used to be. The TTI calculates a Planning Time Index, which measures how much extra time should be allowed to be sure of a punctual arrival. In Austin, the index is well over four, meaning that if it would take 20 minutes without traffic, more than 80 minutes should be allowed for driving just in case traffic is bad. The Metroplex is also a four, and Houston isn't far behind. El Paso and McAllen exceed three, and San Antonio is nearly there. Again, this phenomenon is a source of wasted hours and lost economic efficiency, with people cooling their heels in parking lots, airport lobbies, doctors' offices, and elsewhere when they happen to get lucky with traffic. Traffic delays also increase inventory costs for Texas companies, as they cannot manage logistics in an optimal manner.

Several years ago, the Texas Legislature called for cooperative efforts between the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) and others including the TTI to figure out how best to attack the problem given scarce resources. (Highway funding has long failed to keep pace with economic and population growth, and it is becoming increasingly imperative that we solve the problem, but that's a topic for another day.)

A list of the 100 most congested Texas roadways (maintained by TxDOT) puts IH 35 through the heart of Austin at the top. That stretch of highway alone leads to 788,649 hours of delay per mile and $172 million in congestion costs every year. The second-most expensive roadway in terms of congestion costs is IH 635 in Dallas (from IH 35E to US 75) at $126 million per year. Next are IH 610 in Houston (from UA 90 to IH 10W) at nearly $114 million and US 75 in Dallas (IH 635 to the Woodall Rodgers Freeway) at about $113 million per annum. These are very real costs, and they're only a portion of the economic price of congestion.

Compounding the problem is that there is also work to be done apart from expansion to deal with excess traffic. Pavement deterioration is a big issue. Major upgrades are needed on bridges, interchanges, and more. A recent study from The Road Information Project (TRIP—a nonprofit research organization sponsored by insurance companies, equipment manufactur-

NEW HOMEOWNER LISTINGS

Definitions

Cash Sales and Transactions

Cash sales and transactions are published by default as $10 and do not reflect the actual property value purchased by the grantee. There are three reasons for the $10 default listings: (1) The property was purchased in cash; (2) the deed was transferred to another person, and (3) The grantee was not obligated by law to disclose the amount of the deed of trust.

Mortgage Transactions Page 11

Every residential real estate transaction in Harris County. Listings contain the subdivision, legal description of the property, street address, buyer's and seller's names, mortgage amount, mortgage lender and date of closing. Phone numbers included in e-mail subscription.

JUDGMENTS & LIENS

Definitions

Abstracts of Judgment

A copy of summary of a judgment that, when filed with the appropriate public office, creates a lien on the judgment debtor's non-exempt property.

Materialmen's and Mechanic's Liens Page 14

A statutory lien that secures payment for labor or materials supplied in improving, repairing or maintaining real or personal property. The lien remains in effect until these people have been paid in full and may, in the event of a liquidation before they have been paid, give them priority over other creditors.

Federal Tax Liens Page 14

A Federal Tax Lien is filed by the Internal Revenue Service to create a lien against any property the taxpayer might or does own in the county in which the lien is filed. The lien is created because the taxpayer did not pay any or all of his federal income tax.

State Tax Liens Page 14

Filed by the State of Texas to create a lien against any real estate that the person who the lien is filed against does or might own in the county in which the lien is filed. The lien exists because there was a failure of the tax payer to pay all of his state, city or metropolitan transit authority sales taxes, or because he failed to pay in full his workman's compensation tax.

sources of wasted energy. How much you save depends on how much repairs cost, the size of the leaks found, how big your home is, and your electricity price.

Knowing whether or not you need a home energy audit — and whether it will pay off — is tricky. Amann says you should get one if you feel like you are paying too much for electricity (who doesn't!), and she suggests talking to friends and neighbors. Some utilities are making it easier to see how your usage compares with others nearby, either as part of your bill or with online tools.

If you opt for an audit, Amann suggests using a contractor who participates in the Department of Energy's Energy Star home performance program.

A thorough audit — more than just a walk-through of your home — will include something called a "blower door test." A device is attached to your front door that sucks air out of your home, allowing leaks to be detected. It also establishes a baseline to test the home again after leaks are fixed to determine how effective the repairs were.

type of fee that an investor may pay. Some mutual funds charge a fee to investors when they purchase or sell shares, for example. It's called a "load" payment. These have also dropped in recent years: Average load fees paid by investors are down nearly 75 percent since 1990, according to the Investment Co. Institute.

Hire

city's troubled economy, plenty of companies do the kind of work Trent does. Trent Creative has enough clients to keep the company's seven employees busy, but they're not overworked. So at this point, Trent has no need to hire.

But she's optimistic she'll get more clients. Trent specializes in work for manufacturing companies, and their business is picking up as their customers, Detroit's automakers, sell more cars. She needs to do more sales work to persuade them to create or update their web pages.

"I need to update my website and do more marketing," she says.

THE BURNOUT FACTOR: Mike Coffey isn't planning to hire now, but he will start recruiting if his staff of 16 shows signs of overload. Coffey's company, Imperative Information Group, does background checks for employers. Business is good for the Fort Worth, Texas, company because the local economy is strong. Employers are hiring and want information about job candidates.

Rather than hire to meet the increased demand, Coffey gives workers overtime two or three times a week. He's cautious about hiring because he had to lay off 11 employees in 2009, when the job market froze, and he doesn't want to cut staff again if business slows.

His workers like the overtime. But he keeps an eye on them, watching for clerical mistakes and other signs of burnout.

Traffic

ers, distributors, and other businesses and organizations) noted that without additional money for highways "Texas' roads and bridges will become increasingly deteriorated and congested and needed safety improvements will remain unfunded." Current TxDOT resources aren't enough to keep up with necessary maintenance, much less expand capacity. Voters will have the opportunity to approve some additional funds in November, but not enough to solve the problems.

Yet another challenge is the major wear and tear and crowding on both highways and smaller roadways stemming from oil and gas activity. Many of these roads are in relatively rural areas with highways not designed for the traffic they are now carrying. Drivers in these regions often go far out of their way to avoid the most dangerous places. I also know of businesses and school districts with policies against traveling the more direct roadways they formerly used in favor of longer, but less overcrowded, routes.

Texas is in an enviable position compared to most parts of the nation, with a growing economy and relatively plentiful jobs. However, the state's roadways are in desperate need of funding. TxDOT can only do so much with current budgets, and it's not enough no matter how far and efficiently funds are stretched. Studies have indicated that strategic investments in roadways lead to an ANNUAL return of more than 30% just in terms of economic efficiency. Certainly, it is important to protect the Texas advantage as a lower-cost, business-friendly state. At the same time, it must be recognized that highway congestion and dangerous roads and bridges are also a deterrent to corporate expansion and relocation (not to mention quality of life).
